Let's Practice

Reading with TLC

New Generation

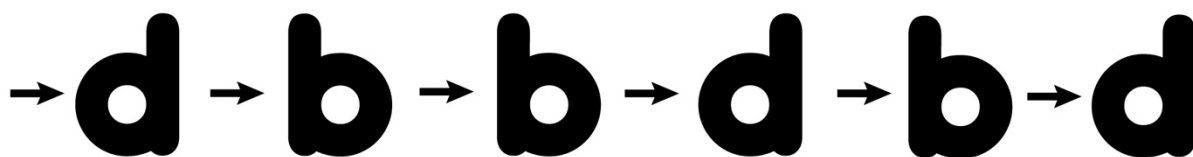

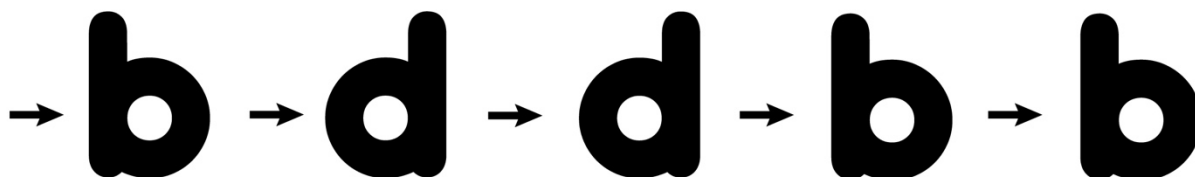

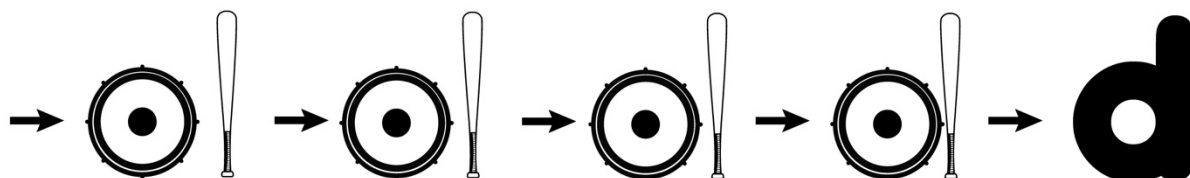

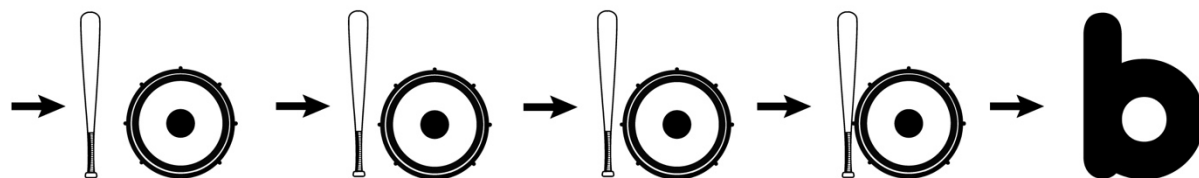

This fun, reproducible workbook contains worksheets and activities that supplement Reading with TLC's Lively Letters™ and Sight Words You Can See™ programs. After successfully decoding and encoding words at specific levels using the Lively Letters picture cards and plain letters, students require the opportunity to practice their letter sound naming, reading, and spelling skills using pen and paper activities. As prescribed in the Lively Letters program, this workbook includes many nonsense words (playfully referred to as “alien words”) to prevent guessing and to necessitate reliance on phonetic sounding out of words. The students' progress depends on extensive practice, with immediate and consistent feedback during these reading and spelling tasks. The worksheets and activities that follow, therefore, should be completed with the active participation of an educator or parent, and are generally not assigned as independent work by the students.

At the end of this workbook, under the section called “Simply Motivational” are game templates to be copied and used with any of these activities (or others you are using) to keep students extra motivated. These games (Tic Tac Toe, The Dot Games, Build a Snowman, and Creative Coloring) are especially useful if the activity in this book is more difficult, and has many words to read in list form. Good luck and have fun practicing!

What's First – the Bat or the Drum?

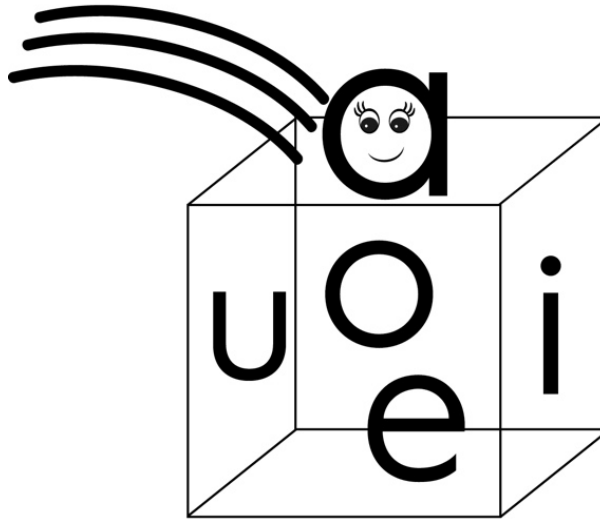

Directions: Along with using the Lively Letters pictures that show the closed lips with the baby (for the b) and big tummy on the dancing tongue (for the d), here is another fun way to practice our b's and d's. Coming from the left, with the student's index finger, a toy car, or a pencil, ask the student tell you, what's coming first, "the b-b-b-bat or the d-d-d-drum?"

You can also draw a dot in the middle of the drum of every d he comes to. Eventually, have the student just practice saying the sound of each letter, as he/she points from the left.

Find the Hidden Vowels

Directions: Look in every box. If it holds a vowel, color that box. When you're done, a word will appear. What word was hiding there? _____”

Cut in Front!

Directions: If you saw one friend waiting in line, he would tell you to cut in line in front of him, yelling, "Cut in front!" If you see one consonant between two vowel sounds, draw a jagged line before the consonant and yell, "Cut in front!" Remember that the dividing line is a mirror, so the vowel coming right before it sees itself and yells out its name. Read the word.
